shereen de rousseau

4 FEBRUARY 2010 - BY MIA

What do Blubird, Lola, Provide and Moule all have in common? Well, besides being spectacular boutiques that you must check out, they all also carry Shereen de Rousseau jewellery. Five years ago Shereen started making jewellery as a hobby. She felt there was nothing out there that reflected her personality. Pretty soon her friends were wanting pieces and eventually so did stores. Two years ago she launched her line and it's popping up in boutiques across the lower mainland.

Shereen's inspiration comes from travelling and makes regular trips to Paris. She spends her time scouring through flea markets and antique shops, finding ways to breathe new life into antique French charms and medallions. Her line has an old world look and feel to it. Combining vintage silver coins with breathtaking stones and glossy pearls.

Every piece has touches of glamour, individuality and attitude. All the pieces are hand-made in her Vancouver studio, using century old methods of casting for the silver. Because making jewellery can involve using harsh chemicals, Shereen has found ways to keep her studio environmentally friendly. One thing that strikes me about this line is it's versatility. It can be worn for a night on the town, or a coffee date with friends. Shereen de Rousseau
